主題と目標

In this course, "Food culture of the world" is discussed mainly from the cultural anthropological points of view. All classes will be conducted in English.

Food culture is the fundamental part of our daily life and culture, although not many of us are well aware of that. Food is not only the means to obtain energy for survival, but through what we eat, we participate in the society. The objective of this course is to reconsider what food means to us, comparatively studying global food culture.

Mixing of lecture, watching motion pictures with English narration, class discussion and short writing assignments in each class, students can develop both their idea on the topic and multiple types of English ability to express that.

In the last 2 classes, students are required to make an oral presentation (approx. 15 minutes, by an individual or a group) on a topic related to food culture, and a written exam, to show their progress by taking the course.

学生へのメッセージ

I wish all students taking this course will have at least one new discovery per class, stimulation for further study, and fun! Through the course, you will get an outlook of food culture of the world, as the first step to be a 'global' person. Not only you can practice comprehending information and expressing your opinion in English; the fundamental skill for international communication, you will also gain flexible mind to face cultural diversity, that is necessary for a real cosmopolitan.
